

NOTICE OF S.A. GENERAL ELECTIONS

APRIL 26 and APRIL 27

VOLUME 13, NUMBER 25, April 4, 1979

BCIT STUDENT PUBLICATIONS

NOMINATIONS CLOSE APRIL 12

NOMINATION FORMS WILL BE AVAILABLE FROM THE SA OFFICES

POSITIONS TO BE FILLED:

PRESIDENT, VP INTERNAL, VP EXTERNAL, TREASURER, BUSINESS, ENGINEERING AND HEALTH SOCIETY CHAIRPERSONS, ACTIVITIES AND SPORTS CHAIRPERSONS.

PRESIDENT

Like every other position on the Student Association executive, the President has a brief job description in the constitution of the Association. It reads like this: (sort of)

The President of the Association shall:

- i. Preside at meetings of the S.A. Executive.
- ii. Act as ex-office member of all committees.
- iii. Perform all other duties of a President as outlined in Robert's Rules of Order.
- iv. Make sure the performance of the Executive members is up to par, according to their duties outlined in the constitution.
- v. Be an official spokesman for the Executive and Council in the Association's dealings with all outside and internal bodies, in an appropriate and unbiased manner.

This is where it gets interesting. What this means is that you are a representative and contact person to the Administration of BCIT and any other persons wishing to deal with the Association. Actually, this is a duty that is a shared responsibility among all the Executive members this year. I get most of the mail, but we divide tasks up among ourselves, in consideration with our interests, previous experience, and time schedules.

Obviously, what is in the constitution does not really give the prospective presidential candidate much to go by. So perhaps I can outline some of things that I have been involved in over the past eight months.

The first thing The President is eligible for when she/he enters office is a summer job. I worked half time for the Association, familiarizing myself with the operations of the S.A. as a whole, and meeting many of the BCIT Administrative staff and Executive. Also, I worked part-time in the TNT shop to get to know the staff and operation of our campus store on a first-hand basis. During the summer Rob Slavik, Blake Cowan and myself got into the negotiations that got the Growlies project going.

When school started, we commenced meeting on a regular basis. If you are an executive member, you can cancel out your Thursday nights for the rest of the year. You will always have a meeting. Then there are countless other meetings, morning, afternoon, evenings. Your schoolwork? You can expect a 10% drop in marks, minimum. You can learn what it really means to work under stress. Your instructors, though mostly who are fairly understanding, will probably shake their heads in disgust as you regularly begin to miss class, but its not because you went roller-skating, but rather because you are wallowing in a sea of letters, school term papers, and unreturned phone messages.

What makes up for all this horsemanure? Fabulous things like learning to be a strong group leader, making important decisions as a group, and working with some dynamic people both in and out of the school community. This year I have gained an independence and level of energy I never knew I possessed. It is a fabulous experience, one that I would only trade for a very large sum of money, say about ten million bucks.

There are so many things that are good and bad about this job, that I couldn't begin to write about them in this small article, hastily typed up with a million other notes on a frenzied Monday afternoon. If you want to know more because you are considering running for this position, you'd better come and talk to me personally. I'm usually in my office in the late afternoon.

One last, but most important thing about this President's job. There is one critical ingredient that as far as I am concerned is essential to doing any kind of a good job, and that is that you have got to basically really like people, meeting them, talking to them, arguing with them, running against them, and most of all, listening to them, because that is what this job is all about.

Fiona Fraser

VP INTERNAL

The office of the VP Internal has a large variety of jobs. The main responsibility of the office is the internal function of the Student Association. These involve:

- employee relations with full-time managers of SA business ventures.
 - Pub TNT Publications Growlies
 - Chief Returning Officer for student elections.
 - organize all association meetings and inform all students of same
 - act as Parliamentarian and interpreter of the SA constitution at all executive - council meetings.
 - assist the President in the performance of his/her duties
- I have found this job to be very challenging. It has been very hard to juggle my time and I have been hard pressed to find all the time I need. I had to set my priorities as to what would get done first. The VPI finds himself involved in other jobs besides what is outlined as his duties in the constitution. For example, I have been involved in:
- Food services advisory committee.
 - Panel to review student appeal of marks review committee decision.
 - BC Independent student finance appeals committee.

The VPI finds himself being a resource person to all students on campus. If they have a problem, I have to be ready to assist them or to find out where they can get assistance. This is true of all executive.

At the beginning of my term, I set myself a project which was the Bus Pass project. It was a project to assist students in reducing their transportation costs. In co-operation with the other post-secondary institutes in the area we were able to get the bus pass for all students. A prospective executive should be prepared to involve himself in a project of this nature. Pick an issue and get some results that will provide an improvement to the general student body.

This job, like all other Executive positions, is hard work, a lot of blood, sweat and tears and quite a bit of fun. To anyone who is willing to devote some of their time to one of these positions, it will be challenging and rewarding.

T.R. Friedrich
VP Internal

VP EXTERNAL

VP of External Affairs: Duties include public relations and promotion

- communicating with student groups, industry and surrounding community.
- coordinating and promoting student activities associated with external organizations.
- Participating in decisions on school issues as an executive voting member on student council.

-Controlling and allocating spending from the promotion and charities budget.

Major Activities for '79-'80

Shinerama September A one day shoe shining blitz all across the greater Vancouver area in aid of Cystic Fibrosis research.

Telethon February Annual fund raising campaign in aid of handicapped and underprivileged children.

My experience as VP External has been extremely rewarding and has developed my skills in time management, communication, and organization. In your term of office you will be working a great deal with the students asking them to help you with your committees and participate in school activities. Your ingenuity will be put to the fullest test trying to think of ways to stimulate enthusiasm and get students involved. Also, you will be required to attend weekly meetings, either executive or council. These meetings deal with major issues on campus and the groups work together in setting policies and making decisions.

The job is demanding but exciting and worth every bit of time spent on it. If you have any questions and are thinking of running for VP External please come and talk to me at my office in the SAC.

Cathy McMahon

TREASURER

How would you like the experience of working with a budget of over $ 170,000? Or trying to keep track of funds that start from a budget of $38,000 and grow because of unbudgeted expenses and unforeseen delays to the tune of $54,000. This has been part of my experience this year working as Treasurer for the Student Association, and could be your's next year - should you accept the challenge.

This position does not require a lot of financial analysis or even ability, but an enjoyment of working with figures, percentages and projections would be helpful. I work closely with Phil Henderson, the Business Manager - who is perhaps 'the backbone of the SA'.

I started off last year setting up and running the used textbook store in the SAC. Basically this involves buying back student texts at half the paid price, searching for the most updated status of the texts, then selling them back in September.

As well, the Treasurer is involved in the running and organization of the Whistler cabin. Though we've had problems with it this year, I think we finally have a good caretaker in there and that should make all the difference.

Working with the Student Association seems to involve persueing group or common goals (Growlies) and a series of personal ones. Recently I spent quite a bit of time researching the draught beer question. This involved everything from talking to liquor inspectors to estimating Beergarden sales and projecting and comparing bottled beer with draught beer sales. I have also been hounding the institute on various money matters - they just recently agreed to pay $2,000

The history of BCIT, Part three by Dave Sherwood

The first year was a smashing success. Through these contacts in the various industries, the businessmen-teachers had an easy time placing graduates from their courses.

And even if there were problems...well, there are always problems.

The students were given exactly what they could expect later, when they graduated. Extra marks were given for being obsequious (with options in servility, fawning and apple polishing). Management and labour (instructors and students) had separate cafeterias, parking spots, washrooms and lounges. Management made all the rules until a few radical students organized a labour union (they CALLED it a student association). (The BOG were going to kick the radicals out until they realized the SA simulated a labour union nicely, after which they used it as a training ground for sneering and shafting and playing dirty tricks.)

Students were required to dress in suits or, if female, dresses.

Everything was going along just fine.

Several years passed.

The Board of Governors looked grim. They were discussing the latest developments on the political scene.

"Socialist hordes," quavered one.

"More unions..." groaned another.

"Pinkos everywhere..." said a third, in a horrified manner.

"I'm leaving," said one, semi-hysterically.

"Yeah," said J.D.

The room emptied in seconds. J.D. went home and hid under his Mercury Montego...his wife hid under her Pinto. J.D. was scared.

The cause of all this upset was the recent election. A rejuvenated In-deepie party, under the leadership of Chubby Dave, had wrested the control of B.C. from Wacky and the Socrabs.

Chubby Dave was angry with big business.

"They're ripping you off!" he told the people during the campaign speeches before the vote.

J.D. had a right to be scared.

And if that weren't enough, the students started to revolt.

The students are revolting! phoned the principal (a minor

"They certainly are," said Eileen, with a chuckle.

"No, I mean really," said the Principal (what was his name?)

"What are they revolting about?" asked Eileen.

"They don't want to wear suits, or be treated like dirt, or have no say in their own education..." (Goard, that was it, Principal Goard).

"Give them whatever they want."

"What!" squawked Goard, who, after all, was a Socrab flunkey still, "And Treat Them Like People!"

"Yes," said Eileen, "the In-deepies need the Youth Vote."

And so were the students emancipated by Eileen Left, Chubby Dave, and the In-deepies.

Now, after Eileen hung up the phone on Goard, she sat back and thought the whole matter through. Everybody, it seemed, was Socrab. Hardly surprising after several millennia of Socrab rule.

She called in her aides.

"What," she said pointedly, "do BCIT's Governors have in common?"

"They all wear ties," said one aide quickly, lifting his head to show his turtleneck.

"...and three piece suits," said another in faded blue jeans and a Prince George Snow Golf T-shirt.

"...and attache case," pointed out another as he hauled some yellowing files out of a brown Safeway bag.

"That's close," said Eileen, in her best school teacher voice, "but there is something that ties these all together. Does anybody know?"

She stood up and looked at them. She took off her glasses and let them hang by a string around her neck. She sat down at her desk and opened her attendance book.

"Ernie?" she said.

Ernie shook his head.

"Paul?"

Paul looked at the floor.

A hand shot up.

"Yes, Martin?" said Eileen lovingly.

"They're all Socrabs, Miss Left," said Martin.

"Very good Martin!" Eileen marked something down in her book, "...and what are we?"

"In-deepies!" the aides chorused in unison.

"And what should the Board of Governors of BCIT be?"

"In-deepies!"

"And who is going to change the Board of Governors?"

"We are!" the aides' chubby faces were shining.

"Class dismissed," said Eileen benignly, as she rang the bell on her desk.

The aides got up and filed out. As soon as they hit the door they broke up into groups. One group went to play softball on the legislature lawn. One group played kick the can in the corridor outside the legislative library. One group went to the legislative cafeteria to play jacks. One group set about planning the ouster of the Board of Governors.

"It can't be done," said Martin apprehensively. Last time Martin had said this the minister had washed his mouth out with soap. It hadn't been a pleasant experience. He had a right to be apprehensive.

"What do you mean, Martin?" said Eileen, putting on her glasses and opening up her attendance book.

"We can't replace BCIT's Board of Governors," Martin hadn't wanted the job of telling Eileen, but Ernie had offered him two glassies and one of the biggest steelies he had ever seen if he would do it. Besides which, he was the minister's pet, and least likely to get punished as the bearer of bad news.

"Why not, Martin?" said Eileen, pursing her lips slightly.

"They've all got terms of office that don't expire for a couple of years," said Martin, perspiring heavily. "I offered to buy them off, but they're all determined to stay. They say it's the cushiest job they've ever had."

"So..." Eileen considered, "...you're dismissing Martin."

"One other thing, Eileen," Martin said, "that Socrab fink Goard has quit."

He left.

Eileen left mulled that last remark over in her head. Principal Goard has quit. Principal Goard has quit. Principal Goard has quit. PRINCIPAL GOARD HAS QUIT! She had the solution to the whole problem.

The next meeting of the Board of Governors was a far cry from the scared, hysterical affair that had greeted the In-deepies rise to power. The BOG had realized that they were in no danger of losing their job. They had taken the precaution of making a BOG term last 12 and a half years...minimum.

"Well boys," J.D. Bigwig leaned back luxuriously and blew some smoke rings from a blimp-like cigar, "we're set. They can't get rid of us, and we've still got the reins of power."

(J.D. Bigwig had read that phrase in a book. He was kind of ashamed at having read one, but one night the T.V. had gone out right in the middle of Laverne & Shirley and there had been nothing else to do. So he had read one of J.D. Bigwig Junior's books. Right near the end it had a sentence from the dying kind.

"I may be done for," had said the king, "...but they'll never get the reins of power."

That's where J.D. had picked up that phrase. Reins of power--really neat.

"Are there any problems?" asked JD, expecting none.

"Nope, everything's going smooth...really smooth," said one governor. He was running a little to fat and was doing isometrics against the wall.

"Yeah, smooth," chimed in another.

J.D. leaned further back, until he looked like a Banana split... the chair being the Banana and his stomach the scoop of ice cream.

"God," he said, "...good."

A knock at the door.

"Come in," rumbled J.D.

Eileen Left walked in. She eyed the governors. She pursed her lips slightly.

"There are going to be some changes around here," said Eileen.

"Huh?" said Harvard Cribbs.

"Harvard, if you are unsure of what I said, then you will pardon me, not huh. Is that clear?"

"Yes, Miss Left," said Cribbs, cowed.

"We are de-lineating, de-toxifying, and de-emphasizing the Board of Governors."

"Huh...I mean, pardon me, Miss Left?" said Harvard Cribbs.

"You are now not the top body at BCIT. The principal is now the overall authority."

But Goard quit!" said J.D.

"I'm here to introduce your new principal. I'd like you to meet Tom Ghordon." Eileen gestured toward the door.

Tom Ghordon walked in.

J.D. dropped his cigar.

The man doing isometrics stopped. His stomach jiggled to a halt.

The Board of Governors looked at Tom Ghordon.

He was wearing a turtleneck sweater. He had a Prince George Snow Golf T-Shirt over it. He was wearing blue jeans. He had a Safeway bag full of file folders.

"Oh no..." said one of the governors softly.

"The car!" said J.D.

All the governors rushed to the

There was a new car occupying the Principal's parking spot. A new foreign car. A new Porsche. Bright red....

The In-deepies lasted only three years, but by the time the Socrabs came back into power, Wacky wasn't around. He'd been replaced by his son...Billy Bungles.

Billy Bungles new as much about running a province as Wacky had about topless bars. Nothing. Zilch. Zero. Not a tad.

Billy governed by what he called divine inspiration...every-one else called it government by spur-of-the-moment.

Billy left BCIT pretty much alone. Unfortunately for the inhabitants of the campus, his education minister didn't.

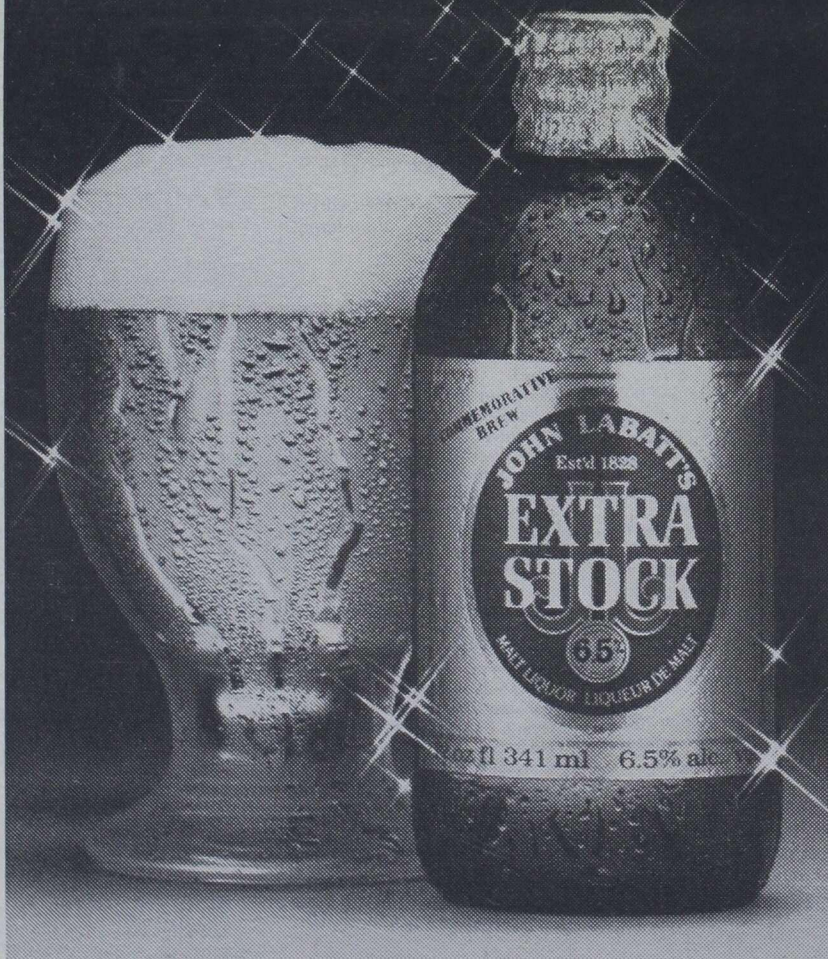

Dr. Pat Big Ears had once been a Liberal. The Liberals were a party that always got into power by telling the biggest fibs. But when Dr. Pat saw that the Liberals were going nowhere, he joined the Socrabs. He fitted right in, he just had to learn not to smile.

Dr. Pat made a good Socrab because he was a good businessman. He proved it at the first cabinet meeting of the new government.

The Cabinet meeting started late. The premier got lost. Somewhere between his office and the Cabinet room upstairs.

worth of extra expenses for Growlies, we owe a note of thanks there, and I am now trying to get the Student Association a share of the revenue from the vending machines that we all plug our money into.

As mentioned by Fiona last week, any one of these positions involves working closely with a number of people and often under some pressure. It's a challenge and you have to enjoy that. Opinions vary but that's constructive as long as the individuals concerned have the tolerance and maturity to perceive the direction of the common goal and to work towards that.

Finally, the rewards are there - it makes me extremely proud to see a service such as Growlies or our pub, Whistler mountain or the Telethon charity and know that I've been a constructive part of all that. It's a great learning experience and I would invite any of you to participate. Please come and talk with me if you think any of this may be for you. You never know what abilities lie inside until they are challenged. Think about it.

Blake Cowan
Treasurer

BUSINESS SOCIETY CHAIRPERSON

As elections will be upon us very soon, I've been asked to write about the role of the Business Society Chairperson.

Although this is an elected position; this is a very selective elected position. Only business division students can run for this post and only those students in the business division can vote for this chairperson.

The basic job function of the Chairperson is to co-ordinate the Business Technologies so that each partner is aware of what's happening outside their own technology. The Chairperson strives to gather and present ideas that might be of benefit to the business student - outside of their present courses. Exposure is one such event that is put on in co-operation with the Business Community, Instructors, and administration of BCIT.

Trying to get guest speakers is another job the Chairperson is in charge of. Unfortunately this year there hasn't been any yet, but you will see some soon. One of the problems in becoming the Chairperson is that in a very short time period you must familiarize yourself with various people around the school, as well as your new job and to start planning from day 1, your goals. To help the new Chairperson while trying for guest speakers for the remaining months, I am also working on setting some up for next fall, as this will help get the Business Society moving immediately.

The Chairperson is also in charge of a budget. All clubs such as the Marketing Club must now request any monies desired from the Business Society rather than go before Student Council.

By being elected to this position you must hold your own Business meetings at least once a month, be present for all executive council meetings as well as attending all regular council meetings. So you can see the time involved is considerable and you must be willing to put in on average 5 to 8 hours a week.

In addition, this year various jobs in conjunction with the Yearbook came under the Business Society Chairperson's supervision as well as sitting on a few extra committees that required student representation.

So why go through this work? What are the benefits? The first benefit is one of personal satisfaction of seeing something getting done, helping the students and contributing your ideas to the betterment of the school. The second is realizing that if you can co-ordinate your school workload with your responsibilities as Chairperson then you should have no problems handling any job you might get once you graduate. The third benefit is getting to meet and contact, people who might help you later on whether it is in the capacity as a job source or reference source. The fourth benefit and only concrete one is your honourarium, some business cards, and a chance of a regular parking spot.

This is a challenging job with a lot of fun going along with it. And if you're interested in running for it, come and see me as I'd be glad to talk more about it to you.

They were one flight of stairs apart. He was eventually found in the press gallery, where a couple of journalists were trying to inveigle him into a shell game.

"You took the wrong turn at the bottom of the stairs, sir," said the Sergeant-at-arms, who eventually found him.

"Eh?" said Billy Bungle.

"You should have gone up, sir, not sideways."

"Oh" said Billy. And they went to the meeting.

They got Billy settled in at the head of the table.

Dr. Pat stood up.

"May I have the floor, sir."

"Sure," said Billy, looking down. It was a nice floor; he would not have minded having it. But if Dr. Pat wanted it, he'd be nice about it. A shame, too. It was nice parquet wood. The wife would like that. Myrna, or was it Edie, or Evelyn, whatever. But Dr. Pat was talking....

"This education thing now," said Dr. Pat. "I figure there is one big problem. It doesn't break even. Everything should pull its own weight."

"I agree," said Willie Wonderspam, Minister of Human Resources, "everything should break even at least. Maybe even make a profit."

"Good!" said Billy Bungles, figuring that as Premier he should say something.

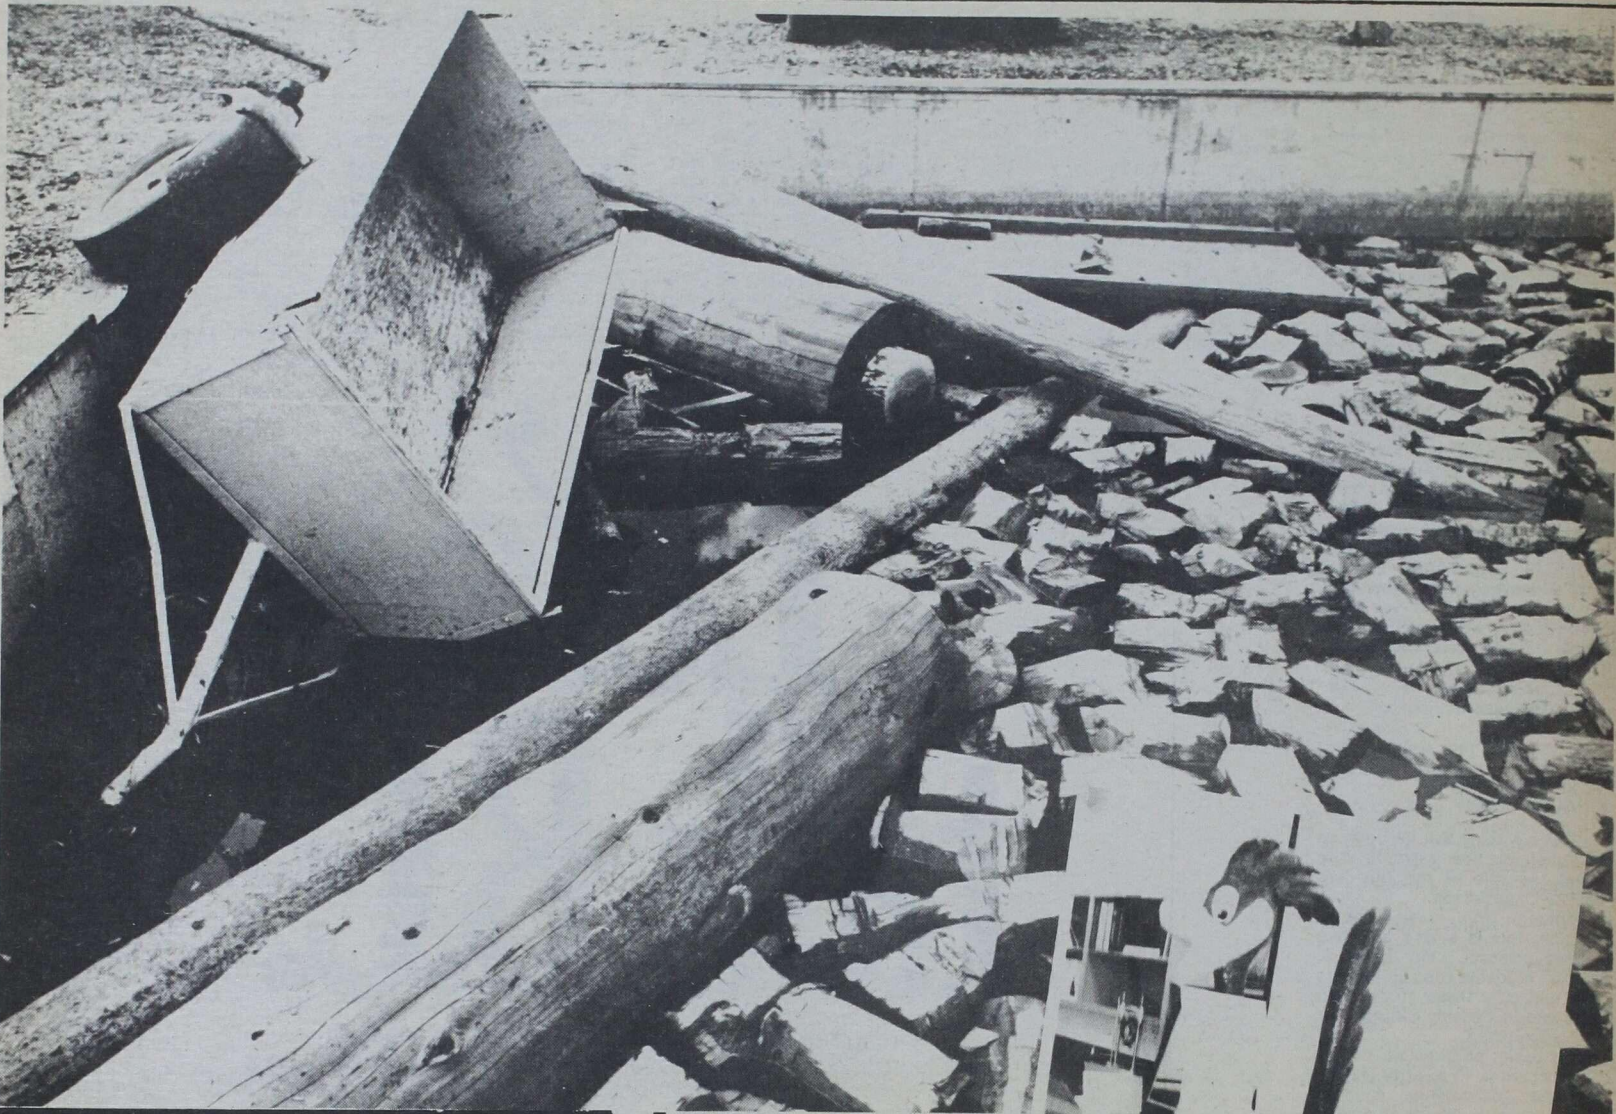

"First, we'll drop their budgets," said Dr. Pat, "and then we'll sell old desks and stuff to make money or something. Yeah, and then we'll put all the money in the bank and give it to people just before the next election."

"Sounds like good political strategy to me," said Willie Wonderspam.

"Yeah!" said Billy Bungles.

And that's the way they worked it.

THE END

EDITORIAL

A fair trade?

Look at the above photograph and tell me what you see. Quite a mess, isn't it. Such a mess in fact, that the police were called in, but they arrived an hour too late to catch the juveniles who did all the damage to the Logger Sports Field.

Ah ha, somebody got the license numbers of the getaway cars. What's this, more evidence? Someone left behind a large 'C&S Playground' sign...whoa, C&S? Hey, this is all falling into place now. This is an act of revenge. Two weeks ago at open house, a group of Forestry students abducted the famed but rarely seen C&S 'Roadrunner'. But that was to be traded for all the trophy case and all the Forestry trophies that C&S absconded with last year, wasn't it?

So why all the destruction over at the Logger Sports Field? Why have a few misguided individuals taken it upon themselves to commit blatant vandalism in the name of the C&S technology. They don't even have the sympathy of the rest of the people in their own technology, let alone anyone else's.

Pranks are one thing, but hey guys, if you're really into destruction, I've got a suggestion for you. You know those damn speed bumps located all over campus, well, if someone were to sort of destroy and remove them in the middle of the night, I'm sure no one would complain...

Letters to the LINK

Dear Editor,

This letter has two purposes, the first is to let everyone in on what's been happening between Forestry and C&S, and the second is to criticize a few hot heads in Forestry. I must state right here that this letter is only my interpretation of what has happened. I don't want it edited, and I won't reply to any letter in response to this one.

Last spring, C&S swiped Forestry's trophy case. In the fall, C&S proposed a way that Forestry could earn their case back. Forestry was to have a bake sale with the profit going to Shinerama, and that a first year girl forester cut up that gross wood pecker they call a mascot. Forestry didn't respond and C&S kept the trophy case.

During Open House, Forestry swiped the C&S mascot (a roadrunner that is the only original BCIT mascot remaining). The mascot was chained to a $500 desk filled with a students term work and supplies. The desk was damaged during its transport with the bird.

When C&S saw the damage, the Pranks Committee immediately called a meeting Monday night, the loggers sports field sign was replaced with a C&S playground sign. That was for taking the bird. Next, all the foresters chopping blocks, choker chains, etc. were dumped into the log burling pond. That was for damaging the desk.

After that prank, the hot heads acted up. They called the police and threatened to press charges, marked up posters advertising the C&S pub, and threatened to crash the pub. They then decided that the charges would be dropped, the dance would be cool, the desk fixed, and the roadrunner returned if C&S returned the trophy case and removed everything from the pond.

Well, a few guys (against the majority) did stoop to the demands to prevent police action and rioting at our pub. About 20 C&S guys and 3 foresters returned the grounds to normal within an hour.

The C&S prank did not cause any malicious damage. We try to avoid that. I don't know about the hot heads representing Forestry though. I mean, calling the police and threatening our dance. Do we play too rough?

I hope no one gets the impression I'm calling Forestry down. Any technology that breaks the monotony of BCIT deserves credit. It's too bad the desk got damaged when it was removed with the bird. Why didn't you use bolt cutters to cut it loose?

Dear Dave:
RE: Beer Makes It Better

A friend and I have discovered a culinary (?) delight (??) you may find interesting for your beer oriented column "Beer Makes It Better"

It's the one and only "North Delta Beer Shake." The recipe is simple: (No heavy memorizing or brain strain).

Simply pour 1 12 oz. bottle of beer (we find Kootenay ale or Labatt's Blue to be best) into a blender. Then thicken with ice cream. Amazingly, it doesn't foam. For an extra treat season liberally with food colouring (the sky's the limit to the nifty colour combinations attainable!) Until you've tried it you won't realize how well beer and dairy products go together.

Student Parking

Construction work is now in progress on the PVI Electrical Training Building. The replacement parking contract is scheduled for completion by April 25th. These factors result in a temporary shortfall of PVI and BCIT student parking for approximately four weeks.

During this period, arrangements were made with the Shriners Gizeh Temple to utilize 150 spaces in their parking lot commencing April 2nd. Access to the Shriners Lot is off Wayburne Avenue opposite the BC Telephone Building.

Another 100 stalls are available to students in a strip immediately north of the fire lane leading to the 1976 building. The entrance to this temporary lot is off Roper Avenue adjacent to Physical Resources Portable 2T.

A further 130 stalls are available for use in the replacement parking area at the S/W corner of the campus adjacent to Willingdon Avenue on a site to be paved later.

Additional BCIT security personnel will be on duty to assist and direct students to the above temporary parking locations and any other areas which may be available.

Unions, onions, heavy music and other sundrys

The day of the trade union s...d have passed into history but, as with all powerful institutions, they will be with us for a long time to come (great shades of income tax). I remember with great bitterness my own run ins with the unions. During the last few years, I have put in some time in the industrial workplaces as both a summer student employee and full time blue collar labourer. The first incident that comes to mind was the interdepartmental bickering that was a constant conversation point while working in a pulp mill. The Instrument department and the Electrical department were at each others throat (the issue hinged around who was to get the maintenance duties for some new computer equipment that was in the process of being installed), and accusing each other of restricting the accusing party to "pulling conduit". Ironically, although both parties considered this a grave insult, nobody in either shop was particularly bright and would have been forced to leave the servicing to the manufacturers. What has this got to do with the union? The whole stupid thing was that both shops were members of the same union local.

Another cute incident was being told that I couldn't do what I was doing because it was a journeyman's job and that I was doing the job of a union man. What the shop steward who said this didn't seem to care about was that, I too, was a member of the same union (not by choice). Someone later took me aside and explained that in the normal course of events, nobody would have minded letting me do the work while they "supervised" but that the shop was trying to convince the management that they were overworked and needed another body to play chess (sorry work). Had any of the management bods raised a stink about the blatant slow down, the whole plant would have walked out in a wildcat strike.

One of the uglier things that I have experienced was the strategy used to convince employees to join the union in the last place that I worked. It was a new shop supplying prefab roof trusses for the building industry. One day a fellow from the union walked in and demanded a meeting with us. We told him to take a flying leap and he replied that he would be back. The next time that we saw him, he had arranged for us to be told by the plant owner that he must be given an audience. We submitted and were told that we were going to join the union. Somebody said that we were perfectly happy in the situation that existed and that joining the union would apparently only bless us with a net loss in pay as the dues would have been greater than the current pay differential they were using as a sucker come-on. The union fellow hummed and hawed and then produced his answer. We had exactly two weeks to agree to join the union or the plant would be shut down. What could we do? We joined the union. From past experience with the same union, nobody will see any of them until it is time for negotiations, and then they are usually several months late. I have paid several hundred dollars of hard earned money to the unions over the years, and I really cannot say that they have done anything for me except screw me.

Nuff said for now.

Onions have been praised as a cure-all for a wide range of ills. I remember an article published in the Sunday Times magazine from England that even went so far as to link the lowly onion with reductions in the level of blood cholesterol. With heart disease listed as the primary killer of people in the developed countries, and cholesterol being accepted as having some contribution to the high incidence, the old phrase; "an apple a day will keep the doctor away" could be changed to; "an onion a day will keep the heart surgeon at bay", (along with all people who dislike the smell of onions).

I have noticed elsewhere in this issue reference to a type of music labeled as 'heavy'. Although I don't happen to like RUSH at all, I still don't happen to consider them as heavy artists (as a matter of fact Geddy Lee weighs in at less than 150 lbs). Now someone like Meatloaf is a heavy artist (something like 300 lbs bone dry) but most of his music is very light. Some of the heaviest music that I have heard was produced by a little dynamo by the name of Jim Morrison. Try listening to such classics as THE UNKNOWN SOLDIER or THE END or WHEN THE MUSIC'S OVER. Very heavy music created by a light fellow.

In another sampling of the delightful humor contained in Fowler's Modern English, I came across this delightful article on pants:

Pantaloon, pants. The words we use for what were once called generically neither garments have undergone some curious variations, partly due to changes of fashion in the way we like to cover or expose our legs, and partly under the influence of EUPHEMISM, which demands constant change in the names we give to anything supposed to have indelicate associations, in this case going so far at one time as to throw the cloak of unmentionables or inexpressibles over the whole shocking business. Pantaloon, a word imported from France for the trousers that superseded breeches or small-clothes, is now obsolete except as the formal word for the trews worn by certain Scottish regiments; so is the female equivalent pantalettes, the long frilly drawers worn by little girls in the early Victorian age. But the diminutives survive: in U.S. pants for trousers and in England pants (for women panties), or, when particularly exiguous, briefs, or scanties, as undergarments. Breeches has returned and, with the help of jodhpurs, plus-fours, shorts, and trunks, has ousted knickerbockers which, in its curtailed form knickers, has been appropriated by women. Bloomers was short-lived for cyclists, but survives for schoolgirls; drawers is falling into genteel obsolescence, and even the highly respectable trousers is menaced by slacks and jeans.

Much thanks for the above goes to the Oxford University Press. It should be pointed out that, in the typical Canadian rubber stamp fashion, we more commonly use the American terms and meanings. For instance; pants are both under and over garments and jeans are jeans (the normal formal wear of most people).

To finally wrap this up in the usual manner would require a note to Mary-Anne at this point. So to be constant:

Note to Mary-Anne: Why did my mind just go blank? Its because I have so much to say and hate saying it to you from such a great distance. I love you. Robert.

To the first person to accurately identify the source of or the actual identity of the above pictured item goes a five dollar bill and a big sloppy kiss [mainly because I am not exactly sure what it is myself although I do know what it isn't. [A sideways look may prove useful.

THE ROCKPILE

Supertramp revisited

I have developed a great feeling of animosity towards accounting over the past few weeks. A balanced statement occurs only when a multitude of mistakes act to cancel each other out, thereby creating the illusion of all being well. What brough this up is that I, along with hundreds of other business students, have just completed the accursed 'practice set'.

All this has nothing to do with music, except that if it wasn't for the music playing while spending all those hours struggling over debits and credits, I could easily have gone raving bananas.

And who better to listen to than Supertramp?

Crime of the Century is both musically and lyrically one of the most remarkable albums of the decade. The lyrics are exceptionally perceptive, and the impact is incredible. The feeling one derives from listening to the album is a powerful sense of silent isolation, with the underlying theme that you are fighting a massive system, to which you find you are actually an integral part.

I get so involved in this album that, even while writing this, I had to have it on.

It was on this album that Supertramp, which actually had released two albums previously, changed all but two members and developed the sound which is a Supertramp trademark, yet to be successfully imitated by anyone.

Just the front cover and name alone of the Crisis, What Crisis? album makes a powerful statement about society today. However, a lot of people were somewhat disappointed by this album. It wasn't as serious as their previous effort, nor did it have the impact. It represented a slight change in direction for Supertramp. The music was a bit simpler, and the lyrics not quite as profound, but it was a good album nonetheless.

It was well over a year later that Even in the Quietest Moments finally hit the airways. It was almost immediately received as one of the top albums of 1978. Once again a slight change in direction - this album allowed them to slow down with a pair of extended tracks resembling symphonic productions. Half the songs on this album received extensive airplay. Anyone who wasn't familiar with Supertramp before was now hit left and right with their music. (at least on FM)

Now, with so many people hungry for new Supertramp, their newest album, Breakfast in America should sell extremely well. Once again, a slight change in direction, without losing the characteristic Supertramp sound. This prevents the group from stagnating as so many bands do these days.

This album should satisfy any and all previous Supertramp fans. Songs like 'Breakfast in America' and 'Take the Long Way Home' are the lighter side of Supertramp as in Crisis, What Crisis?, whereas 'The Logical Song' is reminiscent of 'Crime of the Century'.

Overall a superb effort by a group destined for fame and fortune, although I'm probably too late in saying that. Word has it that they'll be in Vancouver in the early summer. That will be a concert to watch for.

Alice Cooper returns to the Coliseum tonight, and a whole raft of other concerts are coming up in the next few weeks.

Well, its Tuesday morning while I'm typing this into the machine, and I just dumped a Stats exam. That'll teach me to not buy the book and not go to any classes.

Any movement by anyone to abolish accounting and statistics would receive my full support.

Beer makes it better

By Dave Pentland

SAUCED SAUSAGES

- 1 pound pork sausages
- 1 case of beer
- 1 bay leaf
- 1 clove
- 1 large onion

1 Brown sausages and remove fat.
2 Open case of beer and consume with guests. When you have consumed the first eleven beer, add the remainind beer and seasonings to skillet.
3Dice onion and add to mixture. Bring to a boil, then cover and simmer 20 minutes. Now for the veggies.

IMPAIRED CARROTS

- 6 large carrots
- 1 case of beer
- 2 tablespoons butter
- salt and pepper to taste.
- 1Peel and cut carrots into long, thin slices. Open your case of beer and repeat as in sausages. You have to hurry because the sausages will be ready in 20 minutes.
- 2Okay liquid chefs, pour that last beer into the skillet with the carrots and butter.
- 3Cook until impaired (tender) over low to medium heat for about 5 minutes, shaking frequently (not the chef, the skillet.).
- 4Season and add a little brown sugar if you like them sweet. This also works well on blond girls too!
- Serves 4
- The Sauced Sausages and Impaired Carrots served with a good pint or two will keep your average SAC socializer passified, until the early hour pizza run.
- Happy trails and no flashing red lights.

The TP Record Review

by Gordon Bain

The Female vocal world has finally come up with an answer to Russ Mael of Sparks fame. A high, operetic voice. The answer is Kate Bush; the album is LION HEART. Very unique, and interesting to say the least. All the songs were written by Bush, and not one of them is bad, just some better than others. Duncan MacKay, who had a brief association with The Baker Gurvitz Army and spent two years with Steve Harley and Cockney Rebel and now with 10cc, complements the songs by Kate Bush very nicely.

On the whole, Lionheart is very well-recorded, though at times her voice sounds like she went too high and kept the VU meters in the red for too long. We know here at TP that isn't exactly the most technical description, but anybody who does home recordings knows what effects will produce a sort of 'muddy' tone is given when the sound gets a bit too loud or high. Nevertheless this only happens on about two spots and is made up for by the quality of the recording on the album as a whole.

Methinks our set's Flaydoggie would very much enjoy this album. Don't you, Mo? The songs are very poetic and imaginative. Bush has improved since her last album but if you get the chance, get both of them, we don't think either one of them will disappoint you.

RUSH have again come up with a good solid album. HEMISPHERES is probably the best by this Canadian power trio. Geddy Lee's vocals and bass are as strong as ever, Neil Peart's drumming and percussion really stand out and of course Alex Lifeson's guitar (the backbone of the RUSH sound) is nothing short of incredible. HEMISPHERES is an expansion of CYGNUS X-1 from the FAREWELL TO KINGS album but does not delve into the "science fiction" as much.

HEMISPHERES contains some classical influenced music along with their imaginative power rock that RUSH fans have come to know and love. The album also contains their first fling at complete instrumental with La Villa Strangiato, the best cut on the album. This album was beautifully recorded and really should only be bought on import for those of you with decent stereos to pick up everything.

One of the many strengths that Tom Waits has is that he can tell the same story over and over and make it sound different each time. BLUE VALENTINE is his latest, and as usual is a solid album by this convincing story teller. The stories are old but the detail in which Waits goes into make his songs almost too believable, too close to reality. Most people who come across Waits for the first time wonder how he, or anybody, is actually able to sing like that. His strength is in his lyrics. His music almost always contains the typical piano vamps and bluesy riffs, and, is there anything wrong in that? Nothing too pretentious on the album. BLUE VALENTINE is a fairly decent recording but nothing too special is needs with this type of music.

We at TP tried to listen to MIRROR STARS by the FABULOUS POODLES with an open mind. It didn't work. We were very surprised to hear what we were hearing. Catchy bright tunes with funny lyrics. Songs about zombies in suburbia, haircuts and a really unique piece called TIT PHOTOGRAPHER BLUES. All the songs are carefully put together instrumentally as well as vocally. The FABULOUS POODLES are not dumb or out to be a bubble gum sensation. They are more along the lines of a more commercially oriented GRIMMS, (we mentioned Grimms earlier this year; Neil Innes who is the musical writer/director of Monty Python is a member of Grimms). The music hints at 60's pop but with a lot more intricacies in the instruments, vocals and arrangements. If you buy it for a laugh for a friend you will soon be sorry that you didn't keep it for yourself.

Slow-pitch Softball and Soccer leagues—Schedules are posted and some games have been played—getting out in the clean, fresh air is the aim of these leagues. So for fun, exercise and a lung full of health, come on out! If scores are submitted to Campus Life secretary, Loc 845, we will publish them in the Link.

Slow-Pitch rules

1. Ball must be thrown underhand and lobbed in an arc above shoulders prior to crossing home plate.

2. Nine players on lineup go to bat to consist an inning. Then opposition goes to bat.

3. No dangerous base running.

4. Good sportsmanship.

Soccer rules

1. No handball

2. No kicking above waist.

3. Good sportsmanship.

Contemporary Dance—tomorrow in the SAC Activity room 7:15-8:15 pm. We need the ten students to have this 6 session class for $6.00. Here's to another fun group!

Clubs—Susan Snyder will be contacting all co-ordinators in the near future to get write-ups of events in the 78-79 programs. Also at this time it would be appreciated if tentative budget and plan list for the 79-80 program could be prepared. We will be presenting the 79-80 budget for approval in May so please help us to be ready on time and get maximum funding for Campus Recreation.

Jazz Pop Choir—the Jazz pop choir and the band are tuning up for the BCIT graduation ceremonies in June. Rehearsals are Tuesdays, 7:00 pm in the SAC Boardroom.

Jazz Big Band—with Greg Marquette. Rehearsals are Mondays 7:00 pm and Saturdays at 10:30 am in the SAC.

Banquet

It's over now so don't buy any more tickets. Don't laugh—the banquet was held last Friday night and people were actually looking for tickets on Saturday—Oh well.

In spite of the small numbers in attendance (150) a good, or even great, time was had by all.

A fine baron of beef au jus dinner started the evening off along with wine by St. Micheles. The awards presentation followed—the winners of the individual awards were as follows:

1978-79 Campus Recreation Awards

Table Tennis

Singles - James Wong

Doubles - James Wong-Solaiman Jonatan

Badminton

Singles A - Solaiman Jonatan

B - Mike LaJole

Doubles - Paul Yip-Solaiman Jonatan

Curling

Super Hockey League - Business

1000 Mile Club - Marc Bonner

Sportsmanship Team - Health Society

Sportsmanlike Individual - John Garvey (Building)

Staff Support Member - Brian Leslie

Female Contribution - Judith Klontz

Male Contribution - Terry Steph-an

After the awards, pictures were taken and then much fun and merry making commenced. Everyone seemed to be thoroughly sloshed, but, when you're drunk yourself it's hard to judge others.

Many thanks to all those who helped out and especially to those parties who came knocking on my door at 3:00 am—I didn't answer the door.

The spring program is now under way with soccer and softball. Check the bulletin boards or with your Tech reps to see when, where and with whom you play. See you there.

T-shirts winners who could not make the Awards Ceremonies can pick up their prizes at the Campus Life Trailer.

Running Commentaries

By Wah Wong

It's a little annoying and sometimes frustrating having to stop in the middle of a run.

I remember running at a school track when some kids lost their baseball over the fence. They screamed and yelled at me to fetch the ball for them each time I rounded the bend. But I just ignored them, pretending I couldn't understand English. Cruel? Maybe, but I wasn't about to interrupt my run again, not when someone had just stopped me and asked if I had a match. Can you imagine? A runner carrying a match!

Spring is here. That means plenty of sightseers, out-of-town-ers, and interruptions, especially if you run in the parks or along the sea wall. So be prepared.

When the inquirer (not a joker out to make fun of you) is going the same way you are, there's no problem; if you know what he wants, have him drive along with you as you tell him what he needs to know.

But if he's going the other way, you have two options; stop and obligingly answer the questions or simply run on. Discretion, and your mood willing, is probably the best.

It seems that I'm not practising what I preach, but I am exercising my option. Be patient with people (the harmless variety) and you might even be rewarded with a few encouraging words such as "You're looking great" or "Way to go".
