VOLUME 2, NUMBER 1

MARCH 1, 1979

Open House March 23—25

Every two years, BCIT opens its doors and welcomes the public at large to tour the Institute.

This year, the BCIT Alumni Association will be taking over the second floor staff lounge area for the three-day event.

As well as exhibits designed to help alumni members remember what things used to be like at BCIT, the lounge will be a gathering point where past grads will be able to meet each other, and perhaps even an old instructor or two. Refreshments will be served and with a good mix of old and new grads, maybe some private tours of the campus will take place.

BCIT has changed quite a bit over the years and if you haven't been back for a while, you really should try to come and see the new campus residence, the Student Activity Centre (SAC) and the 1976 Building. (Ah, progress.)

You might even find your old locker and see if it still smells the same. You will be able to sit in the old lecture halls and try to remember who said what way back when. Come and see what BCIT offers today's students.

The alumni association does need some help for its part in Open House 1979. If you are interested, please contact Dick Melville, Director of Information Services, BCIT, 3700 Willingdon Avenue, Burnaby, or phone 434-5734, local 202. He will make sure that we contact you.

We need manpower and information to build our exhibit—highlights of your years for your technology. Please call Dick.

Come to Open House 1979, March 23, 24, 25 because we were there!

Hours: Friday and Saturday, 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.; Sunday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

President promises Alumni revitalization

Yes, Virginia, there still is a BCIT Alumni Association. It is alive and under the care and guidance of a new team, led by President Ian Robertson.

Ian is a 1978 Marketing Management graduate currently working for Proctor and Gamble. You might ask Ian: "Why you?" We did.

His answer was: "My interest in the Alumni Association started during my term as Vice President External of the BCIT Student Association. Included in the responsibilities of that office was acting as liaison officer to the Alumni Association. In an effort to perform this, I contacted Dick Melville, Director of Information Services for BCIT. He explained that the Alumni Association had been relatively dormant over the past few years.

"I could not accept the idea that the common bond of having gone through the BCIT experience did not mean that much to people.

"I still do not accept it and I am certain that I am not alone in feeling that graduates of BCIT are still interested in what happens to BCIT today."

Well then, Virginia, what are Ian Robertson's plans for the future of the Alumni Association?

As luck would have it, we asked him just that question.

"Well, in the short term, I see the main task as being one of creating a strong awareness of the Alumni Association's existence. We plan to use this year's BCIT Open House as the focal point to build that awareness and are already working on the Alumni Association's exhibit for it.

"In conjunction with the awareness goal, we hope to maintain communication to graduates with newsletters such as this.

"Another short-term goal is to attract future graduates into the Alumni Association."

"As for longer term goals, the major priority is to build a grass roots Alumni Association; that is, encourage individual technologies to form their own associations under the direction of the Alumni Association. I would also like to see the Alumni Association become a strong lobbying group to any administration that concerns itself with BCIT."

So you see, Virginia, there still is a BCIT Alumni Association. But Ian's final comment should be made public. It concerned how he would measure success during his term as president.

"By the end of my term, I hope to have created enough interest that a full election can take place and that a majority of the 12,000 BCIT alumni will take part."
